Leading Catholic magazine enters the digital age

The Majellan magazine is now available in digital format through our new Majellan app.

The magazine, which has long been a favourite with many Catholic families in Australia and New Zealand, is celebrating its 71st year of publication.

The Majellan is available as an app from the Apple App and the Google Play stores. The Majellan magazine app is also available on phones and tablets.

This digital edition includes all the regular features of the print version, as well as many enhancements over the print version, including videos, audio and links to other relevant websites.

Majellan CEO Tony Biviano says the launch into the digital age is an exciting development for Majellan and “helps us reach a new younger audience”.

“The new app is only the start of the development of our digital offerings,” says Mr Biviano. “We have a new podcast called Figuring out Families in production, as well as many new resources coming on our new website www.majellan.media

“The Majellan has been a favourite for many years with its valuable advice on family issues, personal stories and interesting articles. From now on it is available as a print and digital magazine.”

The Majellan was started by Redemptorist priests in Ballarat in the 1940s. Production moved to its current home in the Melbourne suburb of Brighton in 1963.
