Questions for the Modern World

[Melbourne,30/07/2024] Common Home TV is excited to announce the launch of its new podcast, Questions for the Modern World, your go-to source for inspiring and thought-provoking conversations at the intersection of integral ecology and an inclusive Church. This podcast delves into the profound questions facing faith communities today, exploring how we can live out our faith in harmony with the environment and in solidarity with all people.

Each episode of the Common Home TV Podcast brings to you a leading voice in theology, environmental science, social justice, and community activism. Our guests share their stories, experiences, and insights, challenging listeners to consider new perspectives and take meaningful action while growing in faith. From the wisdom of Pope Francis to the grassroots efforts making a difference in local communities, we uncover the connections between faith, ecology, and the common good.

In our inaugural episode, we are honoured to speak with Felix Corley, a distinguished religious rights activist, journalist, and editor at Forum 18, an organisation dedicated to documenting and advocating for religious freedom in Central Asia, Russia, Russian-occupied Ukraine, government-held Ukraine, Belarus, and the South Caucasus particularly Azerbaijan.

Bruce Duncan, a specialist in Catholic Social Teaching, shares his insights on the Common Home TV podcast, drawing on his extensive experience as a professor at Yarra Theological Union. remarked on the Common Home TV podcast: "Today, our world is struggling. Many flee as refugees from war, violence, or the destructive effects of climate change, while at home we search for solutions to problems like poverty, prejudice, and insecure housing. What difference does faith make in all this? Faith rouses our sense of meaning and motivation in efforts to promote the well-being of others, especially those in need, as Jesus urged us. These themes and more are explored on the Common Home TV podcast"
